

FRANK DERRY - ALIAS MR AMBROSE WILSON

Iain Wakeford 2016

In 1929 Frank J Derry, employed a friend to design a new home on eight acres of land at Ashwood Road, Woking.

Frank Derry was born on the 7th April 1869. In his early years he had been a journalist, writing for a magazine called 'Leisure Hours' and was apparently invited by Alfred Harmsworth to join him on his new venture – the Daily Mail. But for one reason or another Derry declined and by 1911, with several failed business ventures under his belt (if you will pardon the pun), he hit upon the idea of selling 'the Magneto Belt' a magnetised belt to 'improve health and vigour'.

His new company, Ambrose Wilson Ltd, sold the belts for 'a deposit of one shilling down with four weekly one shilling payments thereafter' advertising them in the 'Umpire' and other popular publications of the time, eventually going on to set up a factory producing the belts (including the larger 'Hercules' belt), and then his famous 'Magneto Corset' in September 1911.

According to the official history of Ambrose Wilson Ltd (The Ambron Story – Biography of a Business) early in 1911 Frank Derry was almost broke. He couldn't even afford a cup of tea at Waterloo and had it not been for the fact he had a season ticket on the train, he wouldn't have been able to get home to his wife and family in Woking. 'It was a bleak winter for the Derry family, especially the Christmas of 1910 and early 1911.'

The story then goes that there was a 'haunted house' owned by a doctor who could 'neither let nor sell it', so Frank persuaded the good doctor to let him and his family live there 'rent free' and break the spell – the doctor paying him £50 for the trouble!

I don't know about the haunted house, but the electoral registers show that prior to 1911 Frank Derry was living in a house called 'Clifton'

Frank Derry had been a publisher and advertising agent before hitting upon the idea of selling magnetized belts and corsets on a mail-order basis.

In the 1901 census (below) Frank Derry was living at The Retreat in Guildford Road (where he is listed as a book publisher), but later electoral registers record him in Maybury Road, Midhope Road and York Road before his move to Chertsey Road.

In 1915 the Derry family moved out of Chertsey Road into a house called Carn Brae in Ashwood Road, later purchasing a house a couple of doors up the road (called Ashwood) and replacing it with Hugh Bailie Scott's masterpiece.

Whatever the circumstances of his accommodation it was with the doctor's £50,

Frank Derry was a great benefactor to Woking

But back in 1929 his eight acres in Ashwood Road was still a building site as the architect and garden designer, Mackay Hugh Baillie Scott was building the now Grade II listed Arts & Crafts masterpiece 'Ashwood'.

During the war it was used by St Thomas' Hospital in London for its Maternity Department and afterwards, in 1947, the National Children's Home established a home for 38 babies and toddlers in the house – but it has since been divided into apartments (with new homes built within the grounds) – just one of the many legacies that Frank Derry gave to Woking.

OPEN-AIR WARDS AT PYRFORD HOMES

Previous articles in this series have looked at the establishment of the Church of England Waifs & Strays Society's homes at Byfleet Corner in the 1890's and the transfer to Pyrford of the St Nicholas Home in 1907-8, but now I want to bring the story more up-to-date.

The original St Nicholas Home in Pyrford was officially opened on the 25th July 1908 by the Duchess of Albany, but as I noted last year it was some time before the design, by Mr E J May, was complete due to lack of funds.

The building could accommodate 120 children up to the age of sixteen, but once the boys reached the age of seven they were transferred to the St Martin's Home at Surbiton, until 1915 when a new St Martin's Home was built in the grounds at Pyrford. It was officially opened on the 26th October 1916.

The two homes were initially run separately, but in 1923 they were amalgamated under the rather long-winded title of the 'St Nicholas' and St Martin Orthopaedic Hospital Homes and Special School of Recovery' – more often than not shorted to the 'Homes for Crippled Children'.

In July 1928 the Duchess of York (later Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother) visited the homes, accepting purses on behalf of the extension fund and inaugurating the new open-air ward and operating theatre that apparently had cost £10,000.

The idea of open-air wards was apparently that the fresh air and sunshine would help with the children's treatment – especially those suffering from TB and 'Rickets'. How often the weather allowed their use is not certain, but judging from the photographs they seem to have been quite popular, with another open-air ward added a couple of years later – opened by the Bishop of London.

A LITTLE PART OF BROOKWOOD THAT WILL BE FOREVER AMERICAN

Another Grade II listed building that was built in 1929 in Woking is the Memorial Chapel designed by Egerton Swartwout for the American Battle Monuments Commission at Brookwood Cemetery, which was completed along with the entrance walls and flagpole (itself a listed 'building') in 1930. Over 1,000 American servicemen were buried or commemorated at Brookwood from the First World War, with over 3,600 added during the Second World War (some of whom have been re-interred elsewhere).
